Architecture:

3. One of two houses constructed by the local builder Harrison Barner for his brothers-in-law Carter and Thomas Allen (see Wa-4), this house is a particularly clear example of the I-house format popular in the area during the Greek Revival period. The lack of later additions gives clarity to the proportions and massing of the building, and the unusual occurrence of segmental headed openings gives the house added distinction. The late Greek Revival moldings in the interior are original. The builder was responsible in part for major structures in Bowling Green, including the Warren County Courthouse and Potter's Opera House.
